How $250k turned into $4 billion (And this could be bigger!)

Fellow Investor,

Amazon is not the only reason Jeff Bezos is the world's richest man.

He's also a very smart investor who knows how to spot massive game changing companies years before anyone else and make a fortune from them.

For example, he was one of the first four investors in Google in 1998, when they were still completely unknown.

Although they were operating out of a garage at the time Bezos saw how Google would change the world and invested $250,000.

He won't reveal how much he made on that pick but some estimate it's over $4 billion.

That's a mind boggling 16,000% return!

Which means if you had invested just $1,000 it'd be worth $16 million today.

Bezos was also an early investor in several other startups that produced massive windfalls including Twitter, Airbnb and Uber.

Whether he pays for inside information or he's simply a genius level investor is unknown. But one thing we do know is this: if you were to invest in the same places he has you'd be very rich today.

So where is Bezos putting his money now?

Just like Google when he invested in 1998, it's in an unknown company that's poised to revolutionize our lives.

Ironically, Google's founders Larry Page and Sergey Brin are also putting in $500 million.

And Larry Ellison of Oracle has also already placed a $370 million bet on this too.

And on August 14 you will see why.

That's when an announcement will be made that could make early investors in this company very rich.

If you get in before this date you could benefit from this same windfall.
