

How A Beginner Investor Became a Marijuana Millionaire in Just 18 Months

Are you interested in profiting from marijuana's "green gold rush," but don't think you have what it takes?

Think again.

Meet Rich Allen from Alberta, Canada. Before investing in cannabis, Allen was making a modest living working in a kitchen restaurant.

However, after transforming a $37,000 investment into $1 million in just 18 months, he was able to quit his blue collar job and join the growing group of ordinary people becoming Marijuana Millionaires.¹

And his story should convince anybody that they can stake their claim to this multi-billion-dollar economic boon.

So how did Allen make this fortune so quickly?

It wasn't decades of investing experience. This was the first investment he ever made on his own.

It wasn't good fortune or insider information either.

It was plain, old fashioned common sense.

Allen decided to invest in Canadian Marijuana companies before it was legalized nationwide. This proved to be a smart move, considering the industry skyrocketed and unleashed a wave of profits for ordinary investors like himself after Canada passed the federal Cannabis Act on 17 October 2018.

But the profits Allen saw coming weren't so obvious to his well-intentioned financial advisors.²

"I basically had to fight to get my money out of my retirement account," Allen recalls. Which turns out to be the best thing he ever did.

18 months later, Allen's $37,000 life savings were worth over $1 million – a gain of $963,000 in less than two years.

Now, America is on the verge of legalization

Investors who missed Canada's marijuana gold rush should set their sights on American cannabis stocks, financial experts say.

Cannabis is already a $10 billion industry in America (compared to $7 billion in Canada³); and that's with only 9 states where it's fully legal. Once the federal government ends the prohibition nationwide, just like Canada did, analysts say the industry could skyrocket to $100 billion⁴.

So early American investors could see even better returns than Allen and the other early Canadian investors did.

However, you have to be careful. You can't invest blindly.

If you want to invest in the right cannabis stocks, like Allen did, you need to know which companies could be set to breakout and why.

That means you need strategic guidance from the most politically connected experts. Or tips from leading authorities inside the marijuana industry.

And recently one of the most politically connected Americans met up with one of the most respected industry insiders at the American Cannabis Summit.

Former Speaker of the House, John Boehner, who has connections that reach to the top of the White House, sat down with cannabis investing expert Danny Brody, who launched two of the biggest public marijuana companies in history.

During this historic Summit, Boehner and Brody and a panel of experts revealed 3 of what they believe are the best, fastest moving cannabis stocks you can take advantage of right now.

These stocks could already be beginning to shoot up, so you must move fast.
